Calabria - learn Italian next to beautiful beaches and interesting remains of ancient cultures

Capo Vaticano is situated on the Tyrrhenian coast of Calabria (Southern Italy), just about 3 km from Tropea.

Calabria, generally thought of as a maritime region, is actually an elongated peninsula with some 800 km of mostly mountainous coastline. Overlooking the clear waters of the Mediterranean, Capo Vaticano is known for its natural scenic beauty, beaches and far-reaching history. Tropea, the most well-known town in the area, is only a short leap away from Capo Vaticano and known for its archaeological past, modern-day harbour and rustic houses built on cliff terraces. The cape is regarded as a secret haven among surfers, sailors, and divers. From the rocky landscape of Capo Vaticano there is a wonderful view of the Tyrrhenian Sea and if weather permits, you can see as far as Sicily and the island of Stromboli with its active volcano. The Greeks, the Romans and even the Normans discovered the delight of this fertile landscape across the bridge of the Italian Atlas and remained there for long periods. Today, well-preserved excavations from early settlements, temples, statues, and columns give us an almost perfect insight into the traditions and customs of this period. Also a haven for all those interested in archeology.
